

THE PHOTOGRAPH THAT SHOOK THE WORLD

In 1993, a single photograph captured the brutal reality of human suffering in a way words never could. It showed a starving child from Sudan collapsed on the ground, too weak to move. While a vulture stood a few feet behind waiting. This image was taken during the famine in Sudan by South Africa Photo Journalist Kevin Carter. This picture isn't just about a child and a bird. It's a mirror- a mirror showing what happens when humanity fails. That child represents thousands who were dying silently due to war, drought, famine etc. The vulture in a disturbing way, symbolizes death circling helpless lives, waiting for the inevitable.

When this photograph was published in the New York Times, it shocked the entire world. People were disturbed. It even won the Pulitzer Prize for Feature Photograph in 1994. But it also raised a hard question. Should journalists capture pain or try to save the person first? Kevin Carter faced heavy criticism. People accused him of doing nothing to help the child. But the truth is more complex. Journalists in that war-torn region were advised not to touch victims because of disease risks and government restrictions. A year later, overwhelmed by trauma and guilt, Kevin Carter died by suicide.

This isn't a "beautiful" picture. It's a painful truth. And sometimes, the truth needs to hurt to wake people up.

सफर तय करने के लिए इस शख्स ने अपना

THINKING

If you think you are beaten, you are
If you think you dare not, you don't,
If you'd like to win, but think you can't
It's almost a cinch you won't.

If you think you'll lose, you've lost
For out in the world we find,
Success begins with a fellow's will
It's all in the state of mind.

If you think you're outclassed, you are
You've got to think high to rise,
You've got to be sure of yourself before
You can ever win a prize.

Life's battles don't always go
To the stronger or faster man,
But soon or late the man who wins
Is the one WHO THINKS HE CAN
